Chapter 165: The Dragon Transformations of the Sung Dynasty

The Sung Dynasty, a lineage rooted in both power and divine legacy, carried within them the blood of dragons — a symbol of their immense strength and eternal connection to the divine realms. As their reign continued to evolve, the members of the Dynasty unlocked even greater transformations, marked by their unique dragon forms.

Sung Ye-Jun: The Dark Crimson Dragon

When Sung Ye-Jun transformed, the skies trembled, and the earth itself seemed to bow before the immense power that surged from his being. In his dragon form, he became a Dark Crimson Dragon, a fearsome and majestic creature whose presence could shake the very foundations of realms.

The deep crimson scales that covered his body radiated with an eerie, otherworldly glow, reflecting both the fury of his bloodline and the wisdom of his many years. His wings, vast and powerful, spanned across the skies, casting a shadow over the land as he flew. The power that surged within his body came not only from his original heart, the heart he was born with, but also from the dragon heart granted by birth and the second dragon heart gifted through his system-leveling. Each heart contributed a unique layer of strength, providing him with the endurance and power to protect his dynasty for centuries.

Sung Ye-Rin: The Silver Dragon

Sung Ye-Rin, ever graceful and fierce, had her own unique dragon form. When she transformed, her body became that of a Silver Dragon, a creature of elegance and immense power. Her silvery scales gleamed like the moonlight, radiating a brilliance that was both awe-inspiring and serene. The aura of her form exuded both the calm of a ruler and the ferocity of a dragon that could scorch anything in its path.

Her transformation was a reflection of her noble lineage and connection to the divine. Just like her brother, Sung Ye-Rin possessed three hearts: her original heart, a dragon heart given by birth, and a second dragon heart earned through her growth and leveling within the system. These hearts not only provided her with incredible strength but also amplified her connection to the mystical forces that governed the universe. The silver wings of her dragon form were symbols of her royal grace, cutting through the air with precision and power.

The Three Hearts: The Source of Power

Both Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin possessed the rare and powerful gift of three hearts, each contributing to their power and the stability of their transformations.

1. The Original Heart: The heart they were born with, the core of their being, and the source of their innate strength.

2. The Dragon Heart: The heart granted through their lineage and connection to the dragons, the source of their mana and flame-based abilities.

3. The Second Dragon Heart: This heart was granted through their evolution and leveling system, a divine gift that amplified their power exponentially, providing them with extended mana and the ability to endure battles across time and space.

These three hearts worked in harmony to fuel the transformations of Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin, granting them unparalleled strength as dragons and enabling them to lead the Sung Dynasty with both wisdom and fearsome power.

The Divine Lineage: A Legacy of Power

The ability to transform into dragons was not just a physical change for the children of Sung Su-Ho and Sung Jin-Woo. It was a reflection of their divine lineage, the culmination of generations of rulers and gods who had shaped the fabric of the multiverse. Their transformations embodied the strength of their heritage — the might of Sung Su-Ho's dragon blood and the boundless power of Sung Jin-Woo's godhood.

The Sung Dynasty continued to thrive under their rule, with their three hearts symbolizing their connection to the divine and the incredible power that ran through their veins. Each of them, in their dragon form, would protect their dynasty, their realm, and the multiverse for countless generations to come.